THE SYDNEY MORNING HERALD.
 MONDAY, JANUARY 4, 1864.

To those who contemplate Mr. COWPER's speedy return to office, it must be very satisfactory to observe how rapidly he is growing in political virtue under his present circumstances. It is not to be denied that a long course of prosperity had somewhat corrupted the severe rigour of his political morality. His principles had grown so lax, that it had become hard to find out what they were. They could not be discovered from the character of his associates, for they were always being changed; nor from his proposed measures, for they assumed a fresh complexion every session; nor from his speeches, for they indicated nothing. Now, however, he is getting so braced up by the vigorous atmosphere of the Opposition benches that he is recovering sound principles and his power to express them boldly. This is a very salutary change, and one that will not only reconcile the country to the late Ministerial crisis, but will lead every one to wish that the ratification may be still further prolonged till a perfect cure is effected.

Mr. COWPER took his stand boldly on Wednesday night on the principle that current expenditure should not be met out of borrowed money. He has given in his adhesion to this doctrine so firmly that he cannot for the future think of receding. Yet during his late tenure of office, this very sound maxim was somehow or other quite forgotten by him. Over and over again he endeavoured in our friendly way to jog his memory on this point, but, unfortunately, without effect. There was scarcely a year of his administration in which charges were not put down to the loan account, which ought to have been borne by the ordinary revenue, and posterity saddled with burdens which we ourselves ought manfully to have borne. In this way the national debt has been unduly increased, and the task of the present generation has been unduly lightened.

Mr. EAGAR did not propose to do this. He was not going to turn current outlay into permanent debt. The utmost he asked liberty to do was to make a temporary use of a temporary loan during the early portion of the present year, until he could replace the money out of additional revenue which he intended to raise, but which could not accrue till his new taxes had had time to become productive. As a guarantee that the debt should be paid, he made his Treasury Bills terminable at the end of two years. His plans, therefore, assumed that by or before the expiration of the two years enough surplus revenue would have accrued to meet the short loan. So sensitive, however, has Mr. COWPER grown to the danger of the slightest infringement of sound administrative principles that he felt himself constrained on purely public grounds to refuse the temporary accommodation asked for. No considerations of expediency could induce him to relent. It mattered not that it was shown to him that he himself was responsible for the complication that had arisen, and that he ought to be the last man to prevent its being put straight; it mattered not that he was assured that the danger he feared was imaginary, and had been guarded against, and that great embarrassment to the public credit might possibly arise if the Treasurer were not put in funds to meet accruing liabilities; Mr. COWPER stood up for the inviolable sanctity of the principle that should a temporary loan might be allowed to meet the claims of a past deficit, no future expenditure should be incurred without there were ways and means to meet it. It is satisfactory, we repeat, to find that Mr. COWPER so fully embraces this principle, because it is a guarantee that he will not again violate it when he returns to office.

Our Ministers are so amenable to pressure, and so liable to sacrifice everything to a temporary expediency, that it is a wholesome discipline for them to be brought up standing when they attempt to go on a dangerous tack. The only justification for Mr. EAGAR's proposal was that he could not well help himself. He is jammed into a corner, and he must work out the best way he can. He has no cash in hand; he has liabilities that may tumble in at any moment, and he has a steady expenditure going on in excess of his revenue. Under these circumstances he asked leave to borrow on short-dated bills till he has time to increase his revenue and clear off all arrears. As a matter of fact, he has done this very thing ever since he has been in office. His overdraft at the bank has been a loan, and it is merely altering the form and not the fact of the loan to transform the bank overdraft into Treasury Bills. In either case he borrows to tide over a temporary embarrassment. In the one case he borrows directly from the bank as a customer; in the other, from the general public, who may hold his bills.

At the same time the liberty of borrowing claimed by the Government being as it is admissible only on the ground of a pressing emergency, could not be allowed to supersede deliberate and sufficient preparation to meet the expenditure. Difficult as the case may be, the Ministry, by accepting office, have undertaken to meet it, and they must not shrink this duty in the slightest degree. Any attempt to evade the responsibilities they have assumed—to make use of a temporary loan to avoid the unpleasant task of imposing fresh taxes, would be censurable in the highest degree, and the Opposition is fully entitled to take all fair precautions to guard against such an abuse of the discretionary power necessarily invested in the Executive. Mr. EAGAR has told us fully the worst that can be said about our finances, and that is, that for the past year we have an actual deficit of perhaps half a million, and that for the next year there is a threatened deficit of another £400,000. That being the case he is bound to provide a revenue in excess of the expenditure, so that the surplus may pay off the short loan. He must either reduce his estimates, or very considerably increase his revenue. No excuse can be accepted for omitting this duty, and no unnecessary delay can be tolerated in the performance of it. Nor

 Saturday, 7 p.m.
 A man named Dennis Wood, and his wife, while on their way to this town, last night, were assaulted, and a robbery attempted, by a carrier named Mullock, whom they had met at a public-house, and who afterwards made the attempt by knocking Wood down with a bludgeon, and then knocking Mrs. Wood down, who had possession of the money. On the outrage being reported, Mr. Sub-Inspector Malbon, in company with two troopers, started in pursuit, and found Mullock encamped under his dry. Mrs. Wood identified Mullock as the man who attempted to rob her husband and herself, and the identification is rendered certain by the marks of a severe bite inflicted on the prisoner's shoulder by Mrs. Wood during the struggle.

At 6 p.m. Hayward was bowled by Bryant for 61. Carpenter not out, 58. Four wickets for 141 runs. Hayward was at the wickets from 12.15 to 5.30 p.m. When the stumps were drawn, Calfin and Carpenter were at the wickets.

The weather during the day was beautifully fine, and a large number of spectators were on the ground. The fielding of the Victorians was considered good, and the skillful batting of the All England men was much admired.

NEW ZEALAND.
 [FROM OUR NEWCASTLE CORRESPONDENT.]
 By the Mary Ann, Captain Davies, we have Auckland papers to the 25th ultimo.

There is no particular news from the seat of war. There have been some important military movements signifying a further advance, but the intentions of General Cameron were not made public.

Ensign Duerow died of his wounds on the 24th.

The Marquis has murdered Mrs. Thompson, the wife of a settler at Kaipara, and her daughter. The event had caused considerable excitement, and many residents in the neighbourhood abandoned their homes in terror. The inquest on the bodies of Mrs. Thompson and her daughter had not concluded up to the date of the last papers. The chief had signified his intention of bringing the murderers, if discovered, within the operation of the law.

THE KEAN PERFORMANCE.—On Saturday last Henry VIII. was repeated, when Mr. and Mrs. Kean as Wolsey and Catherine of Aragon again delighted a large and appreciative audience. The character of the great Cardinal, as written by Shakespeare, loses none of its grandeur in the hands of Mr. Kean; indeed his performance is a fine commentary on the historic preservation of Wolsey's life by the great poet. In the third act there is material enough for a whole play—no many incidents are crowded into it, and by concluding the play with the fall of Wolsey, there is a more delicate finish than if carried through the other two acts—though we are sorry the closing scenes of Catherine's life are omitted. The queenly dignity and womanly affection of Henry's ill-used wife are finely presented by Mrs. Kean. Her rebuke of the Cardinal, and refusal to have him as one of her judges was a splendid effort—indeed the whole scene is a triumph of the highest art. The Kean was admirably supported by Mr. Rogers as the Cardinal, Ambassador from Rome; Mr. Everett as Surrey; Mr. Barrett as Buckingham; Mr. Calthorpe as Cromwell; and Mr. Barry as the King. Miss Chapman's idea of Anne Boleyn is extremely chaste and lady-like. Mr. and Mrs. Kean were called before the curtain and loudly applauded on the conclusion of the play. This evening Mr. Kean will appear in Richard III., which may easily be anticipated there will be a crowded house to witness his conception of that character in which his father took London audiences by storm, and established his fame as one of the greatest actors of that period.

VOLUNTEER RIFLE MATCH.—A match was shot at Windsor, on the 26th ultimo, between nine members of No. 2 Company, B. V. R., and nine of the Hawkebury Company. We now append the names of the competitors and the score made by each. The weather was not favourable, as the wind was rather strong, with occasional rain. The match extended over six distances, the competitors firing five shots at each.

The boat was owned by the water works, and was being used for the purpose of conveying goods to the water works. The accident was caused by the boat being overloaded, and the crew being inexperienced.

BERRIMA.
 Saturday, 7 p.m.
 A man named Dennis Wood, and his wife, while on their way to this town, last night, were assaulted, and a robbery attempted, by a carrier named Mullock, whom they had met at a public-house, and who afterwards made the attempt by knocking Wood down with a bludgeon, and then knocking Mrs. Wood down, who had possession of the money. On the outrage being reported, Mr. Sub-Inspector Malbon, in company with two troopers, started in pursuit, and found Mullock encamped under his dry. Mrs. Wood identified Mullock as the man who attempted to rob her husband and herself, and the identification is rendered certain by the marks of a severe bite inflicted on the prisoner's shoulder by Mrs. Wood during the struggle.

NEW ZEALAND.
 [FROM OUR NEWCASTLE CORRESPONDENT.]
 By the Mary Ann, Captain Davies, we have Auckland papers to the 25th ultimo.

There is no particular news from the seat of war. There have been some important military movements signifying a further advance, but the intentions of General Cameron were not made public.

Ensign Duerow died of his wounds on the 24th.

The Marquis has murdered Mrs. Thompson, the wife of a settler at Kaipara, and her daughter. The event had caused considerable excitement, and many residents in the neighbourhood abandoned their homes in terror. The inquest on the bodies of Mrs. Thompson and her daughter had not concluded up to the date of the last papers. The chief had signified his intention of bringing the murderers, if discovered, within the operation of the law.

THE KEAN PERFORMANCE.—On Saturday last Henry VIII. was repeated, when Mr. and Mrs. Kean as Wolsey and Catherine of Aragon again delighted a large and appreciative audience. The character of the great Cardinal, as written by Shakespeare, loses none of its grandeur in the hands of Mr. Kean; indeed his performance is a fine commentary on the historic preservation of Wolsey's life by the great poet. In the third act there is material enough for a whole play—no many incidents are crowded into it, and by concluding the play with the fall of Wolsey, there is a more delicate finish than if carried through the other two acts—though we are sorry the closing scenes of Catherine's life are omitted. The queenly dignity and womanly affection of Henry's ill-used wife are finely presented by Mrs. Kean. Her rebuke of the Cardinal, and refusal to have him as one of her judges was a splendid effort—indeed the whole scene is a triumph of the highest art. The Kean was admirably supported by Mr. Rogers as the Cardinal, Ambassador from Rome; Mr. Everett as Surrey; Mr. Barrett as Buckingham; Mr. Calthorpe as Cromwell; and Mr. Barry as the King. Miss Chapman's idea of Anne Boleyn is extremely chaste and lady-like. Mr. and Mrs. Kean were called before the curtain and loudly applauded on the conclusion of the play. This evening Mr. Kean will appear in Richard III., which may easily be anticipated there will be a crowded house to witness his conception of that character in which his father took London audiences by storm, and established his fame as one of the greatest actors of that period.
